

Timothy Doyle

Professor Timothy Doyle, B.A. Hons. (Melb), M.A. (Adel), Ph.D. (Griffith), is Chair of Politics and International Relations in SPIRE at Keele University in the United Kingdom, where he teaches Global Political Economy, Environmental Politics, Political Sociology, and The Global South. Also, he serves as Director of the Research Centre for Politics and International Studies at Keele.

His most recent works include the books: Environmental Politics and Policy Making in Australia (Macmillan: Melbourne 1995); Environment and Politics with D. McEachern (Routledge: London and New York; three editions 1998, 2001, 2008, translated into Korean, Turkish and now Hindi); Green Power: the Environment Movement in Australia (University of New South Wales Press: Sydney 2001); Environmental Movements in Minority and Majority Worlds: A Global Perspective (Rutgers University Press: New Brunswick, New Jersey, and London 2005); Beyond Borders: Environmental Movements and Transnational Politics, with B. Doherty (Routledge, London and New York 2008); and Crucible for Survival: Environmental Security and Justice in the Indian Ocean Region with M. Risely (Rutgers University Press: New Brunswick, New Jersey, and London 2008).

In his academic capacity, he has taught and contributed to university courses in the United Kingdom, the United States, Malaysia, India and Australia. He has been a dedicated environmental and human rights activist since the late 1970s. He is currently serving as President of the Ecopolitical Association of Australasia, and Director of Human and Environmental Security for the Indian Ocean Research .